". . . It is life alone that all things must serve."
ADOLF HITLER, Mein Kampf, I, 8.

EDITORIAL

The Christian Church has been a Western institution for about a thousand years; in some parts of the West its influence goes back further than that and in some areas a bit less. But, for several reasons, the role played by the Church[1] in Western society is undergoing a fairly rapid and a fairly drastic change now.

In general, the influence of the Church is on the wane, and, even though it maintains considerable strength in some sectors, it is probably not an exaggeration to say that the Church is dying—as a Western institution. (This reservation will become clear shortly.)

There is a great deal of objective evidence to support this conclusion:

● In both Europe and North America church attendance is dropping sharply. Between 1959 and 1969 overall attendance at both Catholic and Protestant churches in the United States dropped by approximately one-sixth. More significantly, in that same decade church attendance by young adults in the age bracket 21-29 years dropped by one-third.

● Bible sales have fallen 30% in the 1959-1969 decade.

● All sects are suffering from a critical shortage of priests, as more priests every year return to secular life and fewer young men enter the seminaries. This drastic decline in the number of priests can be seen, for example, in the almost complete substitution of laymen for priests on the faculties of most church-owned schools.

[1] "The Church" is used in a collective sense here. It means all the organizations embodying the established Christian sects, both Catholic and Protestant, considered as a whole.

The decline in the strength of organized Christianity is an interesting phenomenon which is closely tied to the revolutionary changes which have been taking place in the Western world for the last century—and especially since World War II. Without attempting a detailed analysis here, let it suffice to say that, like the dinosaur, the Church has failed in its struggle to adapt successfully to radical changes in its environment.

Unlike the dinosaur, however, the Church is certainly not dying gracefully or with dignity. Its attempts to maintain its grip have led it to plumb the depths of degeneracy in a degenerate age.[2] And yet, becoming "mod" and "relevant" has not won for the Church the affection of the present generation; it has only lost the respect of a portion of the old generation. Pot and pacifism and "love" have served as a poor substitute for fear and awe.

But the Church is not dead yet. Left to its own devices, it would probably linger in the West for another hundred years or more before becoming a negligible factor in the overall scheme of things. For though it has lost its former position of absolute moral authority, tradition still lends a not inconsiderable weight to its influence. Many Christians who are no longer fervent in their adherence to the Church's doctrines—even those who no longer attend church services—still allow their opinions and attitudes to be governed to a greater or lesser extent by the Church.

Unfortunately, this influence is being sadly misused. The Church, in turning away from purely theological matters and concerning itself primarily with politics and social and racial policies instead, has—on virtually every major issue—taken a position diametrically opposed to ours.

In Germany, for instance, the hostility—or, at best, foot-dragging—of the Church during the period 1933-1945 is well known. Since the war many prominent churchmen have openly boasted of their former treacherous activities of behalf of the enemies of National Socialism.

And in those parts of the world where our race is faced with the menace of miscegenation—America and southern Africa, and, to a growing degree now, England and Australia—the Church has quite clearly taken its stand with the proponents of mongrelization.

The Church once stood as a bitter and determined opponent of the communist movement. Today it has—at best—settled on peaceful coexistence with this deadly enemy of mankind. At worst—and this is becoming more common every day—it has become an enthusiastic collaborator, not only with formally recognized Marxist groups, but with practically every ragtag band of untermenschen big enough to organize a street demonstration in the United States or overthrow the ruling clique in some banana republic.

[2]See National Socialist Liberator, December 1969.

Thus, although there may be grounds for argument about the negative or positive value of the Church's past activities, there can be no argument about the present. Today the Christian Church is playing a racially destructive role; the damage it is doing to the cause of Aryan man far outweighs any possible remnant virtues it may possess.

As a consequence, we have no choice but to recognize the Church as an enemy of the race and act accordingly, even though this may be a painful step for many of us. We may be inclined to recall with nostalgia the time when the Church was closely tied up with the Germanic drive of conquest to the East, with the Crusades and the defense of the West against the Moors or the Mongol hordes. But those times are irrevocably past.

The fact is that Christendom has always been, in theory, a community of faith rather than of blood. Even our appreciation of the Church's centuries-long opposition to Jewish influences in Europe must be tempered by the realization that this opposition was only superficial, being based as it was on purely religious grounds. Now, of course, with the Church stressing more and more the connection between Christianity and Judaism, even this superficial opposition has disappeared. Under insistent prodding from Church liberals, every bit of the Christian liturgy is being carefully "modernized" to bring it into line with the new Judeo-Christian way of looking at things. Even the beautiful and moving Passion Play at Oberammergau has recently been twisted into conformity with the new line by removing or recasting all those portions which portrayed Jews in a bad light.

A strong word of caution is in order on one point: Many Christians—and a few non-Christian admirers of the Church—have taken the position that the Church's faults today are simply the consequence of liberal and Jewish subversion; that the Church is really a fortress of goodness, sorely beset now by its enemies, but worthy of being defended and set right once again for the ultimate good of our race. This is a mistaken view.

To be sure, a great deal of subversion has taken place in the Church. The trouble, however, goes far deeper than that; one can begin to see just how deep by looking at the changing racial complexion of Christendom. Just as with all cultural phenomena, the Church reflects the racial characteristics of the human masses who give it life. When the Holy Roman Empire was the secular arm of Christendom, those masses were substantially Aryan. Today they are not.

Approximately half the Christians in the world today are non-White, and by the end of this millennium non-White Christians will outnumber White Christians by three to two, if the present shift of Christendom's center of gravity to the south continues. Regardless of the reasons for this shift, it is real and has proceeded far beyond any possibility of recall.

Thus, the Church can no longer be regarded as an Aryan institution, and those who serve it cannot also wholeheartedly serve our race. Christians who also want to be National Socialists will be obliged to practise their Christianity outside the framework of the Church.

"Nazi" Drug Ring Broken

Newspapers around the world recently carried the story of the seizure by police of $9 million in narcotics, which had been smuggled into the United States, supposedly by a "Nazi" drug ring operating in Argentina. Head "Nazi" in the ring, arrested by police in New York at the time of the drug seizure, was one James Cohen. Some "Nazi"!

French Archbishop Would Silence Jews' Enemies

As sympathy for the Arab cause and a feeling of repugnance for Jew crimes in Palestine grows among Frenchmen, criticism of Jews is becoming increasingly open in France. And this despite Jewish control of the public-opinion-forming machinery in France, as elsewhere. In addition, hostility toward Jews has been increased greatly by such acts of Jewish arrogance as the recent pirating of five new armored patrol boats from a French port by Israeli agents.

The Jews have wheeled out one of their big guns to silence the French goyim. On April 17 the Archbishop of Paris, Francois Cardinal Marty, issued a statement condemning the growing anti-Jewish feeling. "France is in danger of racism," the Prince of the Church declared. "We must forbid words of hate, ban racist articles and publications." He went on to propose legislation which could be used to jail those publicly making anti-Jewish comments.

UN Honors Top Bolshevik

The United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) has organized an international symposium in honor of Lenin's 100th birthday this year. Participants will discuss "the historical influence of his humanistic ideas and activity in the development and realization of economic, social, and cultural rights." So now we know what the UN admirers mean when they talk about "humanism" and "rights."

German Capitalists Import More Southern Workers

The big German industrialists, anxious for an ever-larger labor pool, have imported more than 1.3 million foreign workers from southern Europe. A recent survery revealed that one in four of these imported workers eventually marries a German.

National Socialism Gaining Among Police

Negro and Marxist groups have stepped up their terrorist activities in American cities recently with a wave of bombings of police stations and other public buildings. A by-product of this activity—especially the attacks on policemen—has been a surge of new police recruits for the National Socialist White People's Party. The Party has received a particularly favorable response from police officers in Washington, Chicago, and Detroit. The clipping below is from a recent issue of the Chicago Sun-Times.

Racist literature in police mail

By William Granger

A congressional candidate charged Sunday that "Nazi hate literature" is being sent to white policemen through the police department's internal mail system.

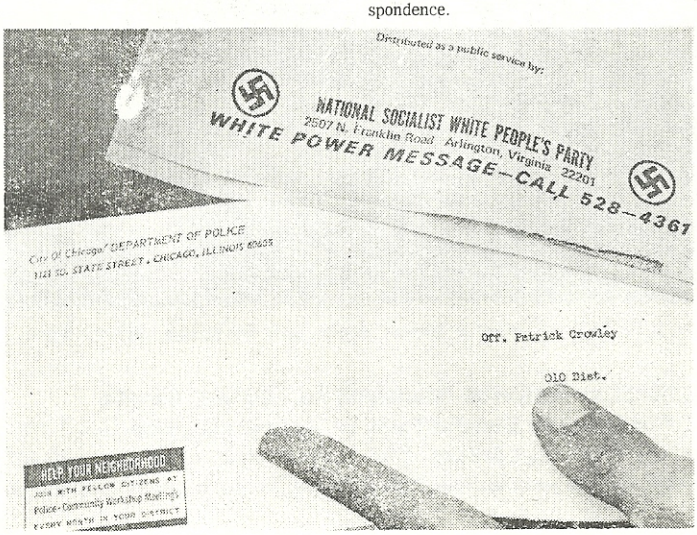
Augustus A. (Gus) Savage, candidate for the 3d Congressional District Democratic nomination, made his charges at a sidewalk press conference in front of police headquarters at 1121 S. State.

He displaed an envelope bearing the police department's return address and addressed to a white officer in the 10th District. Inside the envelope were two leaflets from the National Socialist White People's Party, 2507 N. Franklin, Arlington, Va. One envelope bore the Nazi swastika symbol.

Integrity in question

Savage said he had sent a telegram to Supt. James B. Conlisk Jr. demanding an investigation into the alleged misuse of the police mail system. He said the integrity of the police was in question until the persons responsible for the mailings were found.

Frank Sullivan, spokesman for the department, said the internal mail system is not supposed to be used for any private correspondence.



Liberals Pushing Miscegenation in New Zealand

A few years ago New Zealand had a nearly ideal racial situation, with its population almost completely of British descent. Jews comprised only a little over 0.1% of the population, and the few native Maoris were headed rapidly for extinction.

Then the "humanitarians" took a hand in things. Maoris were given medical aid and other government assistance and were moved from their villages to the White population centers. With a birthrate far exceeding that of the Whites, their population spurted, and they now comprise nearly 8% of the population.

With the cost of supporting the fast-growing Maori population becoming more burdensome by the year, the New Zealand government hit upon a typically liberal solution for this unexpected dividend of their humanitarianism: a program of deliberate miscegenation, with the ultimate aim of a complete mixing of the Maori and European racial groups. Government housing, employment, and educational policies are all directed toward this goal. The photograph below, of a Maori male dating a White New Zealand girl, accompanied a New Zealand newspaper article encouraging such activity.

Race problems — here a Maori youth and European girl — have diminished.

ARGENTINES FORM SECRET NAZI CLUB

Group Has Been Linked to Murder and Robberies

BUENOS AIRES (UPI)—Un on the screen in the darkened room, newsreel shots of the last days of Berlin in World War II showed buildings crumbling under bombs from Allied planes. The small audience of men stirred, but there was no comment.

When the lights went on, one man rose, faced the silent group of young men before him, and said:

"You have just seen the most herois defenders of Western Christian civilization dying in their beloved city's ruins while the rest of the world applauded in glee!"

A murmer of assent arose as the man, wearing a brown shirt with a swastike armband, continued to speak of the glory that was Nazi Germany.

An Indoctrination Meeting

The occasion was an indoctrination meeting for new members of an ultranationalist, neo-Nazi organization called "Tacuara." The place was an apartment in downtown Buenos Aires.

Tacuara is a relatively tiny, officially outlawed organization in this country of 23 million. It says it has 5,000 members who usually limit their

But Tacuara has also been linked with bank robberies, murder and arson. Nine militant Tacuara members broke out of jail in 1964 and are still at large after they were arrested for a 1963 holdup in which $40,000 was taken from a hospital in Buenos Aires.

Tacuara was blamed for the slaying of a 32-year-old Jewish salesman, Raul Alterman, in 1964. Six members were arrested for the killing, but were set free for lack of evidence. Since then Tacuara members have been known to boast that the organization did murder Mr. Alderman as "revenge" for the deaths of three of its members in Rosario, Argentina's second largest city. The youths were cut down in a gunfight that broke out at a union hall.

Arson Charged

Jewish leaders blame Tacuara for a 1968 fire that destroyed an Israeli industrial exhibition in Buenos Aires.

One prominent Jewish leader, who asked that his name not be mentioned, said that neither the Government not the police seemed to act against Tacuara and charged that was because many of the organization's members were sons of influential military officials

Japanese Nationalism Growing

Even 25 years of force-fed democratic liberalism has not completely killed what is best in the Japanese people. This year there has been an acceleration in the growth of Japanese youth groups based on patriotism and devotion to traditional values. Many of these groups are training their members in hand-to-hand combat and other martial arts, in anticipation of full-scale street fights with leftists this summer.

Unrest Rising in Canada's West

Canada's three western farming provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta—are suffering from severe economic depression, with thousands of wheat farmers facing complete ruin. The almost total indifference to the farmers' plight displayed by Canadian Premier Pierre Elliot Trudeau and his liberal government is causing rising anger and unrest in the West. Canadian farmers have recently held several massive demonstrations against the Trudeau regime, and there is growing talk of secession from the rest of Canada by the western provinces.

Although Trudeau, who is known as a "swinger," has been too busy to work with the farmers on their problems, he is regularly seen enjoying the night life of the capital.

Commemorative Dates

May 10: In 1941 Rudolf Hess flies to Britain in an attempt to halt World War II and bring peace to Europe. He is imprisoned and held incommunicado under Chruchill's orders.

June 22: In 1941 the Leader launches Operation Barbarossa, a heroic attempt to smash the Soviet Empire and destroy forever the menace of Marxism.
